

St Edmund Hall

Research Ethics Policy – College-Only Staff

Dated July 13, 2016

1. The University of Oxford is dedicated to the highest standards of research integrity. As set out in its document 'Academic Integrity in Research: Code of Practice and Procedure', it expects all members of the University, including staff and students, and those who are not members of the University but who are conducting research on University premises or using University facilities, to observe the highest standards in the conduct of their research.
2. While joint appointments between St Edmund Hall and the University will be covered by these arrangements, the College has also adopted the University's Code of Practice and Procedure for research integrity for College-only employees engaged in academic research.
3. In adopting this policy, the College recognises the need to secure and protect the existing rights of these researchers, including the right to equal treatment under the law, and to secure and protect academic freedom.
4. Details of the Code of Practice and Procedure can be found at:
